An interaction between leukotriene B4 receptor-1 and leukotriene B4 that enhances leukotriene B4-induced chemotaxis and superoxide production of mouse alveolar macrophages. Mouse alveolar macrophages (AM) release superoxide (O₂⁻) during the initial phases of inflammation. Whereas both cells use receptors to receive signals from leukotriene B4 (LTB₄) for chemotaxis and O₂⁻ production, it is not clear how leukotriene B4 receptor (LTB₄-R) and LTB₄ interact functionally on the level of cell signaling in AM. An increase in O₂⁻ was induced by treatment with a long acting LTB₄ (LTA₄) in AM within 4 h. Low concentrations of LTB₄-R antagonist, SK&F 86002, augmented the chemotaxis and the O₂⁻ production stimulated by LTA₄. At higher concentrations, this antagonist inhibited the LTA₄-induced O₂⁻ and chemotaxis. This effect was not observed with a short acting LTB₄-R antagonist, U75302. SK&F 86002 in addition to blocking the LTB₄ signal mediated by LTB₄-R enhanced the LTA₄ response, whereas U75302 had the opposite effect. SK&F 86002 inhibited the chemotaxis induced by ATP, and enhanced the LTB₄-induced chemotaxis in a concentration-dependent manner. These results indicate that LTB₄-R and LTB₄ interact to stimulate O₂⁻ production in a paracrine fashion on the level of cellular signaling in AM. Does familiarity bias perception of structure? An evaluation of the effects of familiarity and availability. Recent research has highlighted the importance of situational factors (i.e., availability, familiarity, layout) when it comes to recognition memory. However, some memory researchers propose that familiarity is at least as important a factor. Thus, the relative importance of familiarity and availability for recognition decisions has been hotly debated, and no consensus has been reached. The current series of experiments evaluates the relative contributions of familiarity and availability to recognition decisions. Experiment 1 presents three factors that are included in several popular models of recognition memory. A familiarity-based bias or bias for availability would appear in the response time pattern for a recognition decision given multiple items. To control for an alternative and equally plausible explanation of this pattern, we also measured the difficulty of the

Henry Dalton (disambiguation) Henry Dalton was an Australian cricketer. Henry Dalton may also refer to: Sir Henry Dalton (1787–1868), Lord Mayor of Liverpool Henry Dalton (rower) (1866–1937), British rower who competed in the 1908 Summer Olympics Henry Dalton (politician) (1814–1884), British Member of Parliament for Lostwithiel, 1855–1885 Henry A. The data processing system may include a number of other components, such as fans, disks, expansion boxes, racks, and the like, all interconnected with the backplane. The backplane may include a number of discrete circuit boards that provide power to the data processing system, communicate data between the data processing system components and provide an interface to the other components of the data processing system. Further, the backplane may include a number of connectors that allow one or more of the circuit boards to be interconnected with the other data processing system components. The connectors typically are mated to a connector on one of the circuit boards to provide electrical communication between the circuit board and the backplane. In existing systems, the connectors on the circuit board typically are circular in shape. The connector on the backplane is similarly circular in shape. During the mating process the circular connectors are made to engage and be mated to one another. In doing so, the circular connectors are forced to flex in two dimensions. That is, the circular connectors are flexed in two dimensions. As a result of the flexing, the circuit board, the backplane and the other data processing system components may be damaged. For example, circuit boards that are flexed in two dimensions are subject to buckling or delaminating as a result of the flexing. This damage may occur even though the connector halves on the two circular connectors are mated together and even though the connector halves are mated to the respective circuit boards. It would be desirable to provide an alternative system for attaching circuit boards, backplanes, fans, racks, and the like, to one another. Diego Maradona has pulled out of a meeting with Fifa president Sepp Blatter as the World Cup host is expected to be banned for life.
